Tccm trailblazer

It controls the electronically-operated 4-wheel-drive system. All of its functions involve the shift â€" processing the shift request, executing it, and verifying the completion. Where is the transfer case control module located? The driver can reach the connectors easily because it is facing towards them. The module determines the processing of the shift by using the speed of the vehicle and the real-time transfer case mode. If necessary, it may also trigger off the front differential locking actuator. If the shift is not possible, the selector switch will come on and flash for 30 seconds. Apart from this obvious transfer case control module problem , you can look out for these following ones:. Everything on the panel is dead and you might be wondering if it is going to cost you a big amount. You have to perform a TCCM self-test to determine whether you need to change this component or not. Turn the ignition switch while observing the transfer case shift control switch indicators. A functioning TCCM will flash all the indicators before returning to the current gear. Go on checking the battery positive voltage and ignition voltage. You also have to diagnose the connector of the transfer case shift control switch and the ground circuit for ground. It is normal to have this message sometimes. It goes away when you shut the vehicle off and then turn it back on. A bad TCCM could be the reason along with the encoder motor and the button pack. There could be tons of components responsible for engine problems and the TCCM could be one of them. It could happen if the TCCM sends wrong signals to the transmission. You have to change the component to solve this particular problem. Tsukasa Azuma is an awesome car blogger of Car From Japan. At any rate, I get the classic "lights on control switch light for a few seconds at start up, then turn off, with check 4WD light on dashboard". So, the switch most likely is good, and I've tried the fuse-pull approach to waking up the TCCM with no luck. Which TCCMs can swap for each other? Will any of these work in my Envoy? Are there particular model numbers to avoid e. I can see that there are bits and pieces of information that one can piece together from different posts, but I thought that it would be a good idea to have a single, clearly labeled forum thread about the compatibility of different models of TCCM to put that issue to rest. Thanks, -Chris. I've posted about the part number issue many times, as recently as this week as a matter of fact. There should be an sticky thread, but alas, nobody's had time. Just search to find the part numbers. That's why GM redesigned it and places like parts4chevys. If you search there or Rockauto for a part number that's been superceded, it will tell you. That said, even if you get a new part number TCCM that's been used, it will have been programmed for the vehicle. I forget what system the Isuzu used but you will almost never find one of them in the junkyard. Sorry if I wasn't clear. NEW units, virgin off the shelf from a GM authorized source, need to be programmed while in the vehicle. NEW Dorman aftermarket units just came onto the market, and they cost a little less, and do NOT have to be molested by a dealer, so the price you pay is the price you get. Work without the dealers touch. Hope this was a definitive list. Thank you both for your help. I will post back to update my progress. I don't know when the TC fluid was last changed used vehicle, new to me , so I will change that while I am at it reset that clock, too. I'll let you know how I fare. Roadie- You are a valuable source of information on this site, but I think you made a slight error. No buttons on the dash, it's all automatic, it does not have a Lo Selector Switch. The Bravada should be grouped in with the 97X, and Rainer. For some reason I think I read somewhere that the Envoy could go either way, depending on options, but I could be wrong on that. I think you made a slight error. Exactly, they are plug and play. You must log in or register to reply here. Online statistics Members online 6 Guests online Total visitors Secure Browsing.
